There is a hole in the cultural soul lost to its sense of earth and nature and community and society. This hole severs the connection between instinct and awareness and consciousness and action and reaction, expression. The holding and letting go of others. The loving and respecting of others.

The language of music combines temporal and aural discipline with the sight of its notation. The language of mathematics combines the discipline of intellect and cognition, learning, with the sight of its notation. The language of cinema combines the discipline of being with the technology of seeing.

The reproducibility of understanding and comprehension and belief known to art and science are distinct from the immediacy of learning, and the practice of life.

The effort of creation is a state of being, consciousness, and discipline of expression.

The practice of existence occurs within the primacy of the mind-body identity. Within the experience of existence, the mind-body identity, unity, practices the arts of being and technology.

Being and technology are differentiated by reproducibility. This is art and science.

The practice of existence, being, has its unique independence from the experience of existence.

The practice of art, expression and voice, has dependence on the experience of existence. Art is an existential manifestation, as is material life.

When the realization of the social individual in the material domain is balanced with the realization of the individual mind-body identity in the spiritual domain, being is found to be the foundation under the instrument that experiences and expresses.

This is the consciousness of being and sensing.

A partner within the consciousness of being, where the outer consciousness interacts with the inner consciousness, is bound permanently.

The temporal practice of existence, the path or journey of life, is an existential manifestation. The fluid consciousness evolves continuously through thought and experience and reflection and interaction. Its terms are individual, and accord to the thoughts and beliefs of the individual.

A joined existence in the primacy of being, where touch and word heal with the capacity of self, where love can touch and life can breathe. Where one is missing and always found.

This self breathes, and in this way communicates. The languages of the couple suffer neither substance nor separation. Rôle characterizations and differentiations have given way to the primacy of being.

A character of being suited to a realm of thought, and not of the world.
